Accessible gender pay gap report 2020

What is the gender pay gap?

The Government is worried that men often have more higher paying jobs than women. The Government doesn't want this to happen.

The difference between the amounts of money women and men are paid is called the gender pay gap.

The Government has asked all organisations that have more than 250 employees to tell it whether they have a gender pay gap and how big it is.

Does Mencap have a gender pay gap?

We have looked at the different kinds of jobs and pay men and women have at Mencap.

We have found that Mencap does have a small gender pay gap.

It is 3.7%

Our gap is smaller than it was last year.

This means that overall men who work for Mencap have a few more higher paying jobs than women.

We found that the gender pay gap was a bit bigger for people who do the jobs that pay the most.

Why does Mencap have a gender pay gap?

We have looked at some of the reasons that Mencap has a gender pay gap.

We know our pay is getting smaller every year. This is because we have been doing more to make sure everyone is paid fairly.

We need to keep helping our managers think about how to be fair to men and women when developing people and offering people new jobs.

What does Mencap think about having a gender pay gap?

Mencap does not want a gender pay gap.

Mencap wants to do things to keep making the gender pay gap smaller.

What is Mencap going to do?

We are going to do some more work to understand why we have a pay gap.

We will check how we do things at Mencap to make sure that men and women are always treated fairly. If we find anything that is not fair, we will change it.

To be fair we need to do things like making sure men and women both have the same chance of getting better paid jobs.

We will train the people who decide who should get a job at Mencap to make sure they treat men and women fairly.

We will improve our other training to help people who work for Mencap think about what they can do to make sure men and women are treated fairly.

We will ask people who work for Mencap to talk about the gender pay gap and to help us think about other things we can do to improve
